THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM

1974

The judicial system in India is a complex one, involving a hierarchy of courts from the Supreme Court at the top to the District Courts at the bottom. The system is designed to ensure the rule of law and the protection of the rights of citizens. The Supreme Court is the highest court in the land, and its decisions are final. Below it are the High Courts, which have jurisdiction over a particular state or territory. At the bottom are the District Courts, which are the courts of first instance for most civil and criminal cases. The system is also characterized by the separation of powers between the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of government.
