Figure 1

Figure 1 shows the results of the regression analysis. The dependent variable is the number of employees in the firm. The independent variables are the firm's size, age, and industry. The results show that the number of employees in the firm is positively related to the firm's size, age, and industry.

The regression results show that the number of employees in the firm is positively related to the firm's size, age, and industry. The coefficient on the firm's size variable is positive and significant, indicating that larger firms tend to have more employees. The coefficient on the firm's age variable is also positive and significant, suggesting that older firms tend to have more employees. Finally, the coefficient on the industry variable is positive and significant, indicating that firms in certain industries tend to have more employees.

Table 1

Table 1 presents the descriptive statistics for the variables used in the regression analysis. The mean number of employees in the firm is 10. The mean age of the firm is 10 years. The mean industry variable is 1.0.

Figure 2 is a scatter plot showing the relationship between the firm's size and the number of employees. The x-axis represents the firm's size, and the y-axis represents the number of employees. The data points show a positive correlation, indicating that larger firms tend to have more employees.

Figure 3 is a scatter plot showing the relationship between the firm's age and the number of employees. The x-axis represents the firm's age, and the y-axis represents the number of employees. The data points show a positive correlation, suggesting that older firms tend to have more employees.

Figure 4 is a scatter plot showing the relationship between the industry variable and the number of employees. The x-axis represents the industry variable, and the y-axis represents the number of employees. The data points show a positive correlation, indicating that firms in certain industries tend to have more employees.

Figure 5 is a scatter plot showing the relationship between the firm's size and the number of employees, with a regression line. The x-axis represents the firm's size, and the y-axis represents the number of employees. The regression line shows a positive correlation, indicating that larger firms tend to have more employees.
